Other skills: (e.g. Computer literacy, etc.) Computer Literacy: Experience with designs of web pages. I have been project manager on the collection of reports, decisions and judgments as well as other international documents relating to Danish human rights obligations on the web page of the Danish Institute for Human Rights.

Present position: Deputy Department Director and Monitoring Co-ordinator at the Danish Institute for Human Rights, responsible for reporting and monitoring on Danish human rights issues.

Years within the firm: 5 years

Key qualifications:

From January 2003 until now, I have been working at The Danish Institute for Human Rights (DIHR), which is the accredited National Human Rights Institution in Denmark (A-status). I was promoted in 2008 to Deputy Department Director.

My primarily area of responsibility is the drafting of reports regarding Danish legislation, jurisprudence and relevant politics as well as analysing information and trends regarding the human rights issues and the progress (or lack of) in the implementation of a broad field of human rights obligations. Also I have been teaching as a legal expert in international human rights law in general and specific human rights courses and workshops in Denmark and abroad, and at the Police Academy. The cartoon crisis in Denmark has revived the focus on the role of religion and religious feelings vis-a-vis freedom of expression and the secular society, and whether there exist an answer to this issues in the human rights documents.

I have been drafting reviews of proposed bills, especially regarding the rights of the child and on issues relating to the justice system (counter-terrorism, privacy and the work of the police). I have been cited in major newspapers, radioprogrammes and television on a wide range of human rights' issues (rights of the child, discrimination, freedom of assembly, freedom of expression, privacy and fair trial). I consider myself to have a very broad knowledge of a huge range of human rights issues and I am therefore able to put relevant issues into an interesting context. I have contributed to a wide range of international reports with information an analysis. From my time in Northern Ireland and at the International Tribunal for Former-Yugoslavia, along with my brief experience in Nepal, I have developed a special interest in post-conflict situations and sectarian violence, especially the relation between truth and reconciliation on one hand, and prosecution and fighting impunity on the other.

Study on causes and effects of multiple discrimination in the European Union

A European Commission report, 'Tackling Multiple Discrimination – practices, policies and laws', defines multiple discrimination, details its effects and explores the concept from a legal perspective. The report details the results of a study carried out by The Danish Institute for Human Rights on behalf of the European Commission's Employment, Social Affairs and Equal Opportunities Directorate-General. I contributed with the draft for the chapter on experiences on multiple (intersectional) discrimination from third countries outside the EU (Australia, US and Canada).

Towards Common Measures for Discrimination: Exploring possibilities for combining existing data for measuring ethnic discrimination.

The publication was supported by the European Community Action programme to combat discrimination (2001-2006). This programme was established to support the effective implementation of the new EU anti-discrimination legislation. The six-year Programme targets all stakeholders who can help shape the development of appropriate and effective anti-discrimination legislation and policies, across the EU-25, EFTA and EU candidate countries. The Action Programme has three main objectives. These are:

1) To improve the understanding of issues related to discrimination; 2) To develop capacity to tackle discrimination effectively; 3) To promote the values underlying the fight against discrimination. I was the main contributor to the chapter on Denmark in the report.

Thesis

The interpretation of the patentable subject matter criterion in relation to business methods

The aim of the thesis is to provide an analysis of the legal position in patent law concerning the interpretation of the patentable subject matter criterion in relation to business methods. The thesis analyse the US and EPO practices, as the field of patent law is an internationalised area and as the subject has received little attention in the context of Danish practice.
